POWDERY OPPOSES PROPOSED STRIKE

COUNSELS THE APPLICATION OF COMMON SENSE.

Asks Miners to Hesitate, Consider the Awful Cost and See Whether They Have Provisions in Their Houses—False Pride Potent Factor in Causing Strikes—Denounces Libelous Effort to Keep the Working Men from Hearing His Speech at Lake Lodore.

At Lake Lodore yesterday afternoon Hon. T. V. Powderly, commissioner general of immigration of the United States and ex-grand master workman of the Knights of Labor, who probably knows more about strikes, their causes and results than any other man in the country, solemnly counseled the anthracite miners not to strike. He spoke little more than an hour and was listened to attentively by several hundreds of persons, though the thousands on the grounds were made up three parts of young and frivolous pleasure-seekers to one of earnest laborers thirsting for a solution to a prospective difficulty which promises to stir society to its foundations. The speaker was loudly and frequently applauded.

Mr. Powderly opened his remarks by requesting the men wearing felt hats to turn down the sweat bands and see if they contain the label of the hat-makers' union. "You needn't do it now," he continued. "Wait until you have leisure." And a hundred hats were at once replaced.

Here he emphasized the importance of buying only union made goods. Every man, woman and boy who so much as buys a match is an employer of labor and should help to sustain honest industry by buying goods of the union. But they do not understand their responsibility or they would hold labor organizations the highest among men.

SACRED TO LABOR.

"This day," the speaker went on to say, "is sacred to labor. Away back in the centuries men who toiled for their daily bread were slaves. They and their heirs were the property of their choosers. They were ordained by the men of society, who celebrated them by the brutalizing combats of men and beasts. The Christian era overturned that order of society. Progress spread rapidly upward and today we have twenty-eight million men, women and children who are free. The first Monday of September shall be Labor Day—a day when the sons and daughters of toil and their children may get together and uninterruptedly discuss their affairs.

"And why not? We have' saints days. By the way, look over the calendar of saints. How did they become saints. Not one by illness, every one by labor performed at the command of the living God. It matters not what condition they were in when they labored. Why should not labor itself be honored by having one day of the year to show what a blessing it is to the earth? The day is not for politics, worship, patronage, mechanics. They have their appropriate times. At this day on which all other thought should be separated from that pertaining to the earning of your daily bread.

"I have talked to laboring men for years and never saw the time when I was not met with a demand for more organization. Why should not labor itself be honored by having one day of the year to show what a blessing it is to the earth? The day is not for politics, worship, patronage, mechanics. They have their appropriate times. At this day on which all other thought should be separated from that pertaining to the earning of your daily bread.

BIG BOILER BLEW UP.

Explosion at the North Washington Avenue Plant of the Suburban Electric Light Company.

One of the nest of eight boilers at the Suburban Electric Light company's station, on North Washington avenue, exploded at 7:30 o'clock last night.

It shot straight up through the roof, mounted high into the air and dropped just outside the wall of the fire room. The boiler's furnace and the fire room were badly wrecked, but fortunately no one was seriously injured.

The fireman, Victor Andry, of Leach street, was the only one in the fire room at the time. He was standing directly in front of the exploded boiler when he heard a hissing sound. He quickly jumped to one side and escaped the flying debris that came with the explosion, a moment later. His face was slightly scalded by steam, but otherwise he escaped uninjured.

Leo Matthewson, engineer, and Charles King, an older, were in the engine room, but escaped without a scratch, although flying bricks and other debris crashed through the windows and whizzed past them.

The explosion was caused by the burning away of the crown sheet, which let water into the firebox. The boiler was of the tubular variety, eleven feet long and containing 164 tubes. It weighed nearly one ton.

The explosion broke the main steam pipe and necessitated drawing the fires from all the boilers. It was nearly 3 o'clock this morning when the plant resumed operations.

NEEDS OF SUMMER HOME.

What That Institution Has Done This Season.

Two hundred and sixteen tired, care-laden, wan-faced, sad-eyed women and children well fed and sheltered at the non-sectarian St. Luke's Summer Home at Crooked—this is a part of the record from July 9 to the present time.

If generous and charitably disposed Scranton people knew that this splendid work was in danger of being stopped right now in the most delightful and refreshing season of the year, and for the sake of a very few dollars, it is probable that they would prevent it.

The matron's record shows that Episcopalians, Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Roman Catholics, Congregationalists and Lutherans ranging in ages from an infant five weeks in the world to an old lady of seventy-seven years, have been strengthened in body and spirit during two hot months and sent home with a new zest in life. These few facts give only a faint idea of the noble work that has been accomplished, while those who have visited the home and observed its workings have not only carried away with them their good impressions of the institution, but have given according to their means toward furthering it.

By rigid economy and careful management the two hundred and sixteen guests have been given a rest and outing that has probably lengthened more than one life and has certainly brought cheer and brightness to the whole number, probably not one of whom would otherwise have been privileged to enjoy even a brief escape from the heat and poverty of the city.

Money sent at once to the treasurer of the guild, Samuel Hines, 136 Wyoming avenue, will help to keep the Home open longer.

THOUSANDS WERE IN LABOR DAY PARADE

GREAT DEMONSTRATION OF ORGANIZED LABOR.

The Parade Was Held in the Morning and Was Viewed by Thousands of Spectators—In the Afternoon There Was a Picnic at Laurel Hill Park, but the Speech-Making Scheduled for Night Was Prevented by Heavy Rain Storm.

Scranton's streets were crowded all yesterday morning with men, women and children, who donned their finest raiment and braved the heat and dust of one of the warmest days of the summer, to witness what was perhaps the greatest array of organized labor which has ever paraded the streets of this city in celebration of Labor day.

All along the business thoroughfares stores were closed for the day, and gaily decorated with flags and bunting, while the sidewalks were crowded with thousands of Scrantonians and country cousins, all of them eagerly watching the long lines of earnest looking, hardy men, who represent the laboring masses of the city, and, to an extent, the valley. Fully ten thousand men were in the procession, of whom more than half were employes in coal mines.

The parade was in charge of Grand Marshal George H. Gother, and a staff of officers, and it was owing to their splendid work in handling the large number of organizations which made up the line of march that the parade proved the great success it did.

GENERALLY OBSERVED.

The day was more completely observed than ever before in Scranton, inasmuch as nearly all the large business places and industrial centres of the city were closed and idle.

The parade was divided into sections, the first being composed of about 5,500 miners from mines all over the county; the second was made up of members of the mixed trades, and the third, which was known as the industrial division, being composed of disemployed by local business firms.

The parade formed on Wyoming avenue, and at 10:45 o'clock the order to march was given by Grand Marshal Gother, and the sea of men moved forward at the same instant, with banners waving in the light breeze which was blowing, and music being played by the lively music, to which the men in line moved along in rhythmic motion.

Mounted Officers Burke and Bloch first dashed up Mulberry street, clearing the way, and then Grand Marshal Gother, John J. Clarke and John T. Dempsey, and Chief of Staff P. W. Toian rode gallantly forward, followed by Lawrence's band, who in their red coats and caps and white trousers presented a neat and jaunty appearance.

Next in line came the delegates to the Central Labor union and the Building Trades Council, and then the carriages with several distinguished guests and local labor leaders.

Then there was a long, unbroken line of workers in the colleries of the valley. Most prominent of all these were the Leaders, Union No. 306, the striking miners of Old Forge. They marched along, holding on high transparency after transparency, bearing the following: "No Powder in the Collery," "Abolish the Company Store," "Enforce the Two Weeks' Pay Bill."

Then followed the representatives of the valley mine unions, ranging from old men of seventy, who have spent half a century of their lives in picking the black diamonds from the earth, to boys of twelve years, who pick slate at the breakers.

MINERS IN COSTUME.

Union No. 1428 aroused many a laugh along the line of march by the original way in which it was led. No band accompanied the union, but in its van was a grimy miner on a large white mule, and a miner and his wife seated in a rickety old buggy drawn by another mine mule. The North Scranton and West Scranton unions had the most men in line.

The second division was headed by the Horse Shoers' union, who were all mounted and made a splendid appearance. All the men wore white caps and black shirts with a horse-shoe embroidered on the bosom, within which was the union number, "78."

Close behind followed the American band of Dunmore, preceding Electric City Lodge, No. 230, of the Machinists' union. All the men wore white shirts, black and white checkered neckties and black and white caps, and then there trudged along a small band of workers, carrying a big silk banner on which was emblazoned the words "Theater Stage Employes."

For a while the men then made their initial bow to the spectators of the Labor day parade. They were members of the recently organized Clerks' union, and cool and comfortable they looked, as they marched jauntily along, each man swinging a light cane.

The "Clubs" of the union were followed by the Navy and Army Gunners' corps, and then Union No. 84 of the Tinners made their appearance.

THE PRINTERS.

The Typographical, Pressmen's and Feeders and Helpers' unions were well represented, and then the Bricklayers' union, No. 18, strode along, with big James Clark as one of the trio of leaders.

No body of men in the parade made a neater appearance than the Parkers' union, No. 113, which came next in line. Every man wore a white duck suit and a yachting cap, and carried a yard rule in his hand.

A pair of fine lace curtains was the banner carried by the Lace Workers' union, and every member of the union presented a fine appearance, with a handsome lace sash across his breast.

It was a day of shirt waist men, and the Iron Moulders' union were the most progressive men in the parade, in this respect. Every man in the union wore white trousers and caps and a gay shirt waist, which filled the souls of perishing spectators with deep envy.

Then followed the stonecutters and plumbers, after which came the industrial display.

This was headed by several male employees of the Lackawanna laundry on horseback, faithfully attired in their suits. Bauer's band followed, and then came the laundry's first delivery wagon of 1885, and an up-to-date one of this year.

Twenty-two carriages, each containing four of the laundry's young lady employes, were next in line, and fifteen delivery wagons brought up the rear. The Scranton Dairy company had a
